Poll no. 58, June 2006

Poll Results On 100 days on the formation of the 10th Palestinian government

Significant Opinion results:

Executive Summary

Assessment of the performance of the government 100 days after assuming its responsibilities:

* A majority of the respondents 45% believe that Hamas Movement is serious in achieving its electoral slogan: "Yes for change and reform", while a ratio of 26.7% believe that Hamas is not serious.

* With regards to the performance of the new government, the respondents believe that the weak point of the government lies in poor security performance: a ratio of 47.8% of the respondents believe that the security chaos phenomena have increased since the formation of the government while 18.7% said the phenomena decreased. A ratio of 38% said the performance of the security apparatuses is bad while 23.1% believe that their performance is good and a ratio of 36.1% said the performance of the security apparatuses is average.

* A majority of the respondents 31.7% said the new government assisted in pushing forward the current reforms in the PA compared with a ratio of 25.4% of the Palestinians said the new government is impeding the reforms. A ratio of 39.1% of the Palestinians doesn't see any impact of the government on the reform efforts.

* Within the same context, the respondents' assessment of the government is similar to the assessment of the previous government; however, the Palestinians feel the new government achieved progress in its performance in the sectors of education and health. A ratio of 50.2% rate the performance of the government in the education sector as good and only 14.1% think the performance is bad. In the health sector, 35% of the respondents believe the performance of the government is good while 25% see its performance as bad. The respondents noted the progress achieved in the performance of the PM as a majority of 43.9% believe his performance as good while only 21.3% see his performance as bad.

* A ratio of 36.6% said the work of the government is more transparent than the previous government while 25.6% said the opposite.

* A ratio of 41% of the public believes that the level of corruption decreased during the reign of the current government while 17.5% believe that corruption increased. It should be noted that a vast majority of the respondents 78.8% believe there is corruption in the PNA while 15.6% of the respondents said there is no corruption.

* In the field of conflict in jurisdictions between the government and the presidency, a ratio of 50% of the respondents blames the presidency while 38.3% hold the government responsible.

Assessing the change in political positions and thoughts on the basic issues

- * The ratio of those supporting the two-state solution (Palestine and Israel) within the historical borders of Palestine declined from 57.9% in February 2006 to 52.4% in June 2006.
- * There is no significant change in the support to the military operations against Israeli targets where the ratio was 43.8% in February 2006 and the ratio in this June poll is 43.1%.
- * As for support to the suicide bombing operations against Israeli civilians, the ratio continues to decline to reach 44.8% in this June 2006 poll compared with 49.7% last February.

Public trust in political and religious figures and factions:

- * If elections were to be held today and if the same blocs ran in the elections, the ratio of Palestinians who will vote for the Change and Reform List (Hamas) declined from 41.4% in February 2006 to 30.8% in June 2006.
- * Ratio of Palestinians who would vote for Fateh Movement increased to 33.2% compared with 31% in February 2006.
- * A ratio of 19.5% of the Palestinians said they will not vote for any of the lists or blocs which reflect a notable decrease in desire to participate in the elections compared with the previous poll. The ratio of Palestinians who said they don't want to vote was 9.2% in the last poll.
- * A slight change was noted in the support of the respondents to other lists; for example, support to the Alternative List decreased from 2.1% to 1.4% while Independent Palestine List achieved some gain from 2.6% to 3.0%. Support to Martyr Abu Ali Mustafa List increased from 4.0% to 4.3% and the Third Way List from 1.8% to 1.9%, which means that the decline in the level of desire to vote for Hamas was large compared with a slight change in desire to vote for other lists.
- * As for trust in political and religious factions, Fateh Movement got a trust ratio of 33.7% compared with 30.6% last February. Trust in Hamas Movement decreased from 38.7% last February to 28.9% in this poll. Ratio of those who don't trust anyone rose from 15.1% in February 2006 to 21.7% in this June survey.
- * In general, the results of the poll show that support of the respondents is split between Fateh and Hamas and the remaining majority doesn't support anyone, which reflects the tendency of the Palestinian people moving towards a bi-polar party system with weak or almost absence of alternative parties.
- * The same applies to the trust and confidence in all Palestinian figures: those who trust PM Ismail Hanieh more reached 18.2% and President Mahmoud Abbas got 13% while a ratio of 5.6% of the respondents trusts Marwan Barghouti.
- * As for the President's Performance 47.4% of those surveyed are satisfied with the way President Abu Mazen is performing his job as a President of the PNA while 48.3% are dissatisfied with this performance.
- * It should be noted that the ratio of respondents who don't trust any figure went up from 21.6% last February to 27% this June.

Varying levels of trust of the public in the capacity of the various parliament blocs towards the various government duties

- * The viewpoints of the respondents vary with regards to the capacities and potentials of the elected parliament lists to succeed in the various duties. A majority of 48% of the respondents believes that Hamas is most capable of achieving the reforms while a ratio of 39.6% believe in the capacities of Hamas to wipe out the security chaos phenomenon. On the other hand, a majority of 45.2% of the respondents believe that Fatah is more capable of reviving the economic conditions and a majority of 41.1% think that Fatah is more capable of reaching a just political solution and more capable of solving the unemployment problem as 37.8% of the respondents believe so.
- * At the level of the services, a ratio of 40.2% of the respondents trust Hamas capacity to succeed in achieving a better quality of services as the majority trust Hamas capacities to improve the health services and a ratio of 41.9% of the respondents believe in the potentials of Hamas to improve the educational services.

The variance in viewpoints was clear in the following trends; for example:

- * At the level of conflict in the jurisdictions between the Presidency and the Council of Ministers, a ratio of 55.3% of the respondents in Gaza Strip blame the Presidency while 35.8% only blame the government. But in the West Bank, a ratio of 47% blame the Presidency and 39.8% blame the government.
- * Within the same lines, the respondents viewpoints differed on the issue of supporting military operations against Israeli targets: a ratio of 38.9% of the respondents in the West Bank support those operations while 50.5% of the respondents in Gaza Strip support them.
- * On the issue of support to suicide bombing operations against Israeli civilians, a ratio of 58.2% of the respondents in Gaza Strip either support them strongly or somewhat compared with 37.1% of the respondents in the West Bank.
- * The same trend was also clear in the assessment of the respondents to the performance of the new government: the respondents in Gaza Strip feel the improvement in the performance of the new government with a ratio of 34% while only 22.9% of the respondents feel the same way in the West Bank.
